January 28th Meeting

MEMBERSHIP – KEY TO THE FUTURE

Emily Francona, the Assistant District Governor and Membership Chair for PORC, presented a program stressing the importance of new members for the future of Rotary. She challenged the membership to reflect on what they had done to bring in new members and showed an outstanding DVD featuring former Rotary International President Clifford Dochterman.

Dochterman began by saying that the future of Rotary depended on the continual recruitment of new members. He discussed three ways membership could be strengthened and increased – by seeking new members, by retaining current members, and by starting new clubs. He stressed that there were a variety of ways clubs could go about these tasks and had a wealth of suggestions for each of these categories. Above all he emphasized that clubs should not simply be mired in old ways of doing things, but should think of new ways of running meetings or doing projects that might be attractive to more people, especially to busy young professionals. For example, he noted that attempts to get 100% attendance sometimes stand in the way of recruiting an active, energetic member who cannot make all the meetings. (The Port Orford club was a bit amused when he suggested that the argument that a town is too small for a second club is just an excuse for inaction.)

Dochterman's energetic presentation brought home afresh the need for recruitment of members, and certainly suggested a variety of interesting ways the Port Orford club might go about the task.
